FRONTIER LESOTHO

LESOTHO MOVES TO DIVERSIFY AS CRUCIAL AGOA PROVISION IS FINALLY RENEWED

After months of delays, the US Congress voted in August to extend the Third Country Fabric provision of the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), thus securing the medium-term future of Lesotho's garment industry.

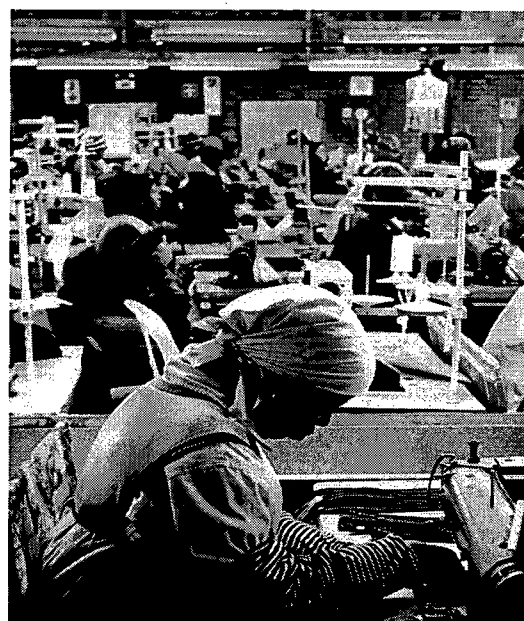

The provision, which now allows clothing exporters in AGOA-eligible countries to use non-African fabrics until 2015 without losing duty- and quota-free access to the US market, is small in the grand scheme of global trade. But for countries like Lesotho that have seized upon AGOA to jump start broad-based economic development, it is critical.

Without the extension, Lesotho's apparel sector would have been dealt a catastrophic blow just as it is recovering from the 2008 global downturn.

With the extension, about 40,000 Basotho workers can continue to be employed, acquire new skills, benefit from employer-sponsored health programs, educate their children and provide support for other dependents.

Moving forward, AGOA is providing an impetus for the Government of Lesotho to develop fiscal frameworks, policies, and expertise to undergird further economic growth:

- To attract investment and allow investors to avoid cumbersome bureaucratic processes, the government created six large industrial zones, which together house about 60 factories. These zones are fully serviced with the full range of utilities and good roads, and have access to rail links connecting them to distribution hubs and ports in South Africa.
- Procedures and regulatory processes for businesses have been simplified and centralized so that the Lesotho National Development Corporation (LNDC) can take care of all necessary administrative procedures and cater to the business needs of foreign investors. Through its Investment Promotion Center (IPC), the LNDC markets Lesotho to potential new manufacturers and aggressively courts new foreign investment.

- The need to quickly move goods from factory floor to export destinations has resulted in Lesotho making enormous strides in developing systems for transportation, customs, and logistics.

While there are positive signals that AGOA will be renewed beyond 2015, the Government of Lesotho is laying the groundwork to diversify its economy away from reliance upon apparel exports, so that its economic fortunes will be less reliant upon US legislation.

Lesotho's economy is set to expand 5.2% this year, after growing 4.2% in 2011, according to the International Monetary Fund (IMF). This growth is due largely to continued public sector investment and the country's burgeoning mining sector. The projected growth is particularly encouraging given the negative effects of the sluggish US economy on Lesotho's apparel exports and the volatility in currency markets caused by the Eurozone crisis.

The country's apparel sector has been hit hard by the European debt crisis, Minister of Finance Mr. Timothy Thahane told the Wall Street Journal in May, because the country's currency (the loti) is tied to the South African rand, which has swung wildly against the US dollar, making it difficult for manufacturers to plan and hedge their production.

"We have to work with the textile [industry] to try to figure out how to protect ourselves from that volatility," Mr. Thahane said, identifying training programs, infrastructure upgrades and further economic diversification as the primary measures targeted by the government to strengthen the country's position. The apparel sector is Lesotho's largest employer, providing jobs for about 45,000 people.

Faced with numerous challenges to Lesotho's clothing industry, the government and its private partners have worked hard to keep the apparel sector competitive. Last year, in spite of the weakness of the economic recovery in the US, the country's apparel exports grew 12% to $314.3 million. Eighty percent of clothing made in Lesotho, Africa's top apparel exporter, is sold to the US, which imports the apparel duty-free under the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA).

Progress on implementation of Lesotho's $362.6-million Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) compact, signed with the US in 2007, is also beginning to reap economic benefits. The compact supports the construction of the Metolong Dam, which - when completed in 2013 - will greatly improve water delivery to domestic users, apparel factories and other businesses located in and around the capital of Maseru.

Earlier this year, as part of the compact's private sector development component, a new Land Administration Authority (LAA) began operations, with the mandate to regularize and register the private ownership and leasing of land. In addition, bills have been submitted to parliament to establish a credit bureau, and mandatory court-annexed mediation of civil and commercial cases are underway through an MCC-funded legal reform project.

As a result of the MCC-Lesotho's health project, construction of a domiciliary health clinic has been completed and a computer teaching lab opened at the National Health Training College for nurse and lab technician education. Discussions are underway on the establishment of a public-private partnership to support health facility maintenance, health care waste management, and information and communications connectivity.

MINING SECTOR TO ACCOUNT FOR MORE THAN 20% OF GDP BY 2017

In the wake of spectacular diamond finds in recent years and with demand for precious gems exploding among consumers in emerging economies, Lesotho's mining sector is growing rapidly, with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) predicting in May that the sector will account for more than 20% of GDP by 2016/2017, up from 7% in 2010/2011 and less than 1% in 2000.

Lesotho's diamonds are considered to be the finest in the world, with an average value per carat of $2,776. In recent years, international investors have reactivated three mines - Lihobong Mine, Letseng Mine and Mothae Mine - with several more scheduled to come on line in the near future. In 2006, Gem Diamonds, a mining interest based in the United Kingdom, unearthed the 603-carat Lesotho Promise, which sold for $12.4 million. Other finds include the 550-carat Letseng Star, the 493-carat Letseng Legacy, and the 478-carat Light of Letseng.

The IMF predicts that the diamond mining industry will bring an estimated $1.1 billion in foreign direct investment (FDI) to Lesotho over the next five years, with diamond exports expected to increase significantly from 24% of total export earnings in 2010 to 54% in 2016.

While the mines are owned and operated by foreign mining interests, the government, which owns a 25% to 30% interest in each of the operations, benefits through corporate taxes, dividend payments on state shareholdings, royalties, and land rent. In 2011/12, the IMF reported that the government is projected to collect about 330 million loti (US$38.7 million), or about 4% of total revenues. The government's share of revenues is expected to increase to about 8% by 2016/17 as the sector continues to grow and the depreciation on the cost of new mines diminishes.

While diamond mining is capital intensive and not a major job-creator, the government is working to retain more of the value of the mineral by training local workers to evaluate, classify, cut and polish rough diamonds at its Lesotho Diamond Academy. Over the coming months, the Government will be developing a comprehensive mining policy which will guide future foreign investment and provide a platform for negotiating greenfield projects.

The Arts Club of Washington

(The Historic Home of President James Monroe)

2017 I St NW

Washington DC, 20006

Following a peaceful constitutional transition of power two weeks ago, Malawi stands on the threshold of a new era under the leadership of President Joyce Banda, southern Africa's first female Head of State. A strong advocate for human rights, gender equality, private sector solutions to poverty eradication, and education, President Banda is reaching out to international partners to support renewed efforts to strengthen the nation's economy. Please join this high level delegation, led by the Honorable Minister of Finance and Economic Development, in celebrating a new Malawi and the beginnings of new global partnerships.

Please RSVP to rsvp@thewhitakergroup.us by noon on Thursday, April 19th.

This reception is a widely attended event
